“Digitising these solutions to make it simple, effective and easy for them (sporting organisations) is going to be the key, without giving them another task, or job to complete”

The sports industry from grassroots to professional has been on pause since March of 2020. However, with restrictions starting to lift around the world sporting organisations at all levels are figuring out how to return to play in a safe and structured way. This session explored how SportsTG (a Stack Sports company) and Rosterfy came together to offer a unique solution that makes life easier for sporting organisations at all levels to adhere to varying regulations with regards to tracing and managing volunteers, staff, and players.

Key points from the session:

- It's becoming clear, particularly in the UK and Australia, that a return to sport is dependent on an organisations ability to comply with strict Government regulations designed to reduce the spread of COVID-19. This includes:
 - Tracing the movements of volunteers, staff, and players
 - Managing numbers of people in one place (training, and match day)
 - Managing all the contact details for volunteers, staff and players
- SportsTG and Rosterfy have come together to provide accessible solutions that can provide the data required to meet these varied government regulations
- These accessible solutions combine SportsTG's expertise in digital management solutions for sporting organisations, with Rosterfy's event workforce engagement platform

- The key component of this is the integration of Rosterfy's digital attendance tracking data in an easy format, with SportsTG's broader management software for sporting organisations of all levels

Summary:

As play returns for sports around the world, there is going to be a new norm, where there is a need to understand who a participant is, what time they're at a venue, did they take to the field on a certain weekend, and what time was the match.

At the same time, there is a need for sporting organisations to manage the movement of their volunteers, staff and players during training, events etc. to abide by any restrictions on gathering sizes, and or trace any future outbreaks.

These are the two key problems that SportsTG and Rosterfy have come together to solve in an easy, and accessible way for sporting organisations from grassroots up.
